Greetings,

I'm a college student here in La Crosse, Wisconsin. I never thought I'd be involved with politics, but for those who pay attention, we realize politics encompasses all our lives. I'm proud of this country and this state and I want to impart the great promise of this land to my fellow peers. I want to tell them they are each part of a great system where their voice matters just as much as everyone else. I've come to realize that I can't honestly tell them that anymore. This is why I volunteer, this is why I fight for our Democracy as it was intended to be, and this is why I write to you today.

Do you believe the election system at the federal level could work better for the average American? We want a convention so we can have a conversation somewhere other than Congress about how to make our election system work better for the average American citizen. Congress is broken and they recently earned a 9% approval rating - we can't count on them to fix it.

That's why I write to you. Connecticut could be the fifth state to follow suit. There are already four states on board.

Sincerely,

Joshua Rostek
